Excerpt: . sensitiveness adjusted until the deflection reads directly in hundredths of a degree. No special provision is made for reversing B and N, as experience with the earlier apparatus showed this to be unnecessary. The new apparatus differs from the old, also, in that the thermometer must be detachable. Two heavy wires have therefore been run to two metal blocks in each calorimeter, and to these the thermometer can easily be attached. It will be noted in fig. 7 that each calorimeter is not provided with an entirely independent set of connections, but that the chair calorimeter and calorimeter No. 4 are connected in parallel, as are also calorimeters Nos. 3 and 5. This is allowable because other considerations prevent the calorimeters thus joined from ever being used at the same time. It will be seen that the method as described is approximate only, and not exact, since the measuring current changes with each position of P. The error thus introduced may be made negligibly small for any case by making R sufficiently large as compared with CD. The resistance CD should be kept small from another standpoint as well, namely, that of sensitiveness. By the use of some kind of compensating resistance, equal to CD and arranged so as to be decreased as CD is increased, and Hce-versa, the arrangement can be made exact. See pp. 14-22. Fio. 6. Elementary wiring diagram of modified apparatus. Current from the battery B flows through PD....
